Wain and Hughenden Play To 4-4 Deadlock

On Monday evening at the local arena Wainwright and Hughenden hockey teams played to a 4-4 tie and gave a nice exhibition of the great winter sport pastime to a good sized audience of rapt fans.

In the first period only one goal was scored. Russell Gaudet getting credit for the marker. A scramble occurred in front of the Hughenden net. The puck was battled out to the corner where Lane secured possession; he passed back in front where the rubber was deflected from a Hughenden player's skate; it landed just near Gaudet and Russell lost no time in battling it in.

In the second canto each team scored three goals and this proved the most exciting period of the game. Allan Coult made a clean shot from the blue line which Coult failed to deflect.

This tied the game and put joy into the hearts of the boys from the south. Their joy was short lived however, as in shorter time than it takes to tell it; Worton and Lane combined in a scissors passing scheme which slightly befuddled the Hughenden defence, and Worton planted a beauty in the hump on a neat pass from Lane.

It was only a few minutes however till Hughenden again did things up. Harold Coult picked up a pass from the corner where about three Hughenden players were cowering around absolutely uncovered, and landed a beauty. Coult had no chance to save.

Lane and Worton again worked their scissors passing scheme with deadly effect and duplicated their effort of a moment before; Worton scoring on Lane's pass; it was nice work.

Wainwright again forged to the front when the second line of sharpshooters got into action. Dupre, Hyde and Wallace came down in formation. Dupre passed from just over the blue line; his aim was true and Len Hyde made no mistake on his shot.

This put Wainwright one up coming home, and when the teams lined up for the last period it was soon evident that the home crew was determined to hold their advantage. The Hughenden team pressed hard for an equalizer but it was only near the finish that they managed to get the necessary counter. Key took a pass near the blue line, evaded his check and shot from the right boards to tie things up.

From then to the finish, Wainwright worked at high tension to score but though they bombarded the Hughenden goal from all angles and as many as three Hughenden players were lying cross-wise in the goal mouth at a time, it was impossible to get one through; and thus the game ended in a deadlock. The Hughenden boys were short a substitute and refused to play off the tie to the disappointment of the crowd.

It was a good game and very evenly contested, and although play kept things well in hand.

WAINWRIGHT LOSE TO IRMA BY 3-2 SCORE

On Thursday evening last the Wainwright hockey team were trucked over to Irma to mix it with the Irma puck chasers. They lost the encounter by the score of 3-2, which by this time is getting to be quite a common occurrence. The ice was heavy which slowed up the game considerably. In all the hockey "dished" up was of a low standard.

The game was only two minutes old when Hendricks scored for Irma putting the local boys in a hole right from the start. Morrison then followed this up with another goal for Irma. These two goals had the tendency to inject a little life into the game, for which there was plenty of room, and with about three minutes to go Carl Tory batted a loose puck past the Irma goalie. The period ended without any further scoring with Irma leading 2-1.

Before the second period was three minutes old Hendricks had slipped another goal into the Wain-

"Little Giant" Comedy Drama At The Elite

A First National comedy feature, with Edward G. Robinson, Mary Astor and a full cast of noted stars, will be at the theatre this week. Novel, as lively as a bunch of exploding fire-crackers, full of laughter. The Little Giant is a comedy entertainment of the most pleasing type, with cleverly constructed drama. It is premised on the fact that a man who is a little giant, and a woman who is a little giant, are married. The husband is a little giant, and the wife is a little giant. They are married. The husband is a little giant, and the wife is a little giant. They are married.

As the 1932 elections returns float in, Hughenden, a re-election of our old friend Little Giant, decides that the mob racket is all washed up. Busting up the Chicago mobsters, he reserves a million and a half for himself and announces that he is going to be a gentleman. With the eternal mug, Douglas as a sidekick, he goes in for culture, Greek philosophy, the classic, futuristic art. Looking for a place to light, Bugs decides on ritz Santa Barbara. Picture little Caesar Bugs trying to crash the gates of society. He and Al never get a tumble, but they provide plenty of fun. He learns that you have got to have an estate if you want to make any kind of an impression. Does he go for it big? Ruth, Wayburn has little difficulty in renting him 40 rooms, 20 baths, swimming pool, mink gardens, polo field and all. He goes for Polly Cass in a big way, and does she take him down the line.

Edward Robinson has proven to be a comedy ace. In this picture he is hot to get in big business, finally realizing he has been trimmed, you see how he falls, the finale has the mobsters playing polo with machine guns, automobiles and sawed off shotguns.

Ice Carnival Is Big Success

MISS FLORENCE BRADLEY IS
CARNIVAL QUEEN WITH 2100
VOTE MAJORITY

Friday night last saw at the Wainwright skating rink one of the largest ice carnivals held in Wainwright for a long time. The weather man apparently was trying his best to have the affair postponed, first with the very mild weather, which made it difficult to keep the ice in condition and then about 8:00 p.m. a light fall of snow started, but managers Lee and Tory were not to be outdone at this stage and kept things moving off smoothly despite the weather and came out on top; the snowfall not being heavy enough to do any great harm.

There was a large number of costumes on the ice, some original and well got up, which showed considerable time and work had been spent in preparation for the event, also the general run of darkies, clowns, Chinese, soldiers, etc.

The success of the carnival is largely due to the interest taken in it by the local business men of Wainwright by donating the numerous and valuable prizes which gave the contestants something to work for. They are to be congratulated in their efforts to make the carnival the success that it was.

After all the votes had been counted and checked over it was found that Miss Florence Bradley had won the honored position as Queen of the Carnival by a majority of 2100 votes receiving for this a lovely bath robe.

The job of judging which is something of the same nature as a referee of umpire, it being almost impossible to please everyone, was assigned to Mrs. Joe Welch, Mr. Jack Baker and Mr. Bates of Winnipeg, who very ably carried out their assignment and allotted the following prizes:
Ladies' Fancy—1st was given to Miss Armstrong who was dressed as a pirate. She received a tea set donated by Mr. Carrell.
The 2nd prize was taken by the Quaker lady in the person of Mrs. Vanda. The prize for the best dressed skater donated by Mr. McLeod.

Men's Fancy—Mr. Geo. Agnew won 1st in this class representing one of our Oriental friends, the champion for his effort he received a bill-fold donated by R. T. Wright.
Second in this class was won by Doug. Wallace dressed in a soldier's uniform and received a paint brush donated by the Atlas Lumber Co.

A judge of the number of soldiers' uniforms, but as far as we can learn Doug. had his buttons shined, thus getting the prize.
Ladies' Comic—Mrs. Lane took 1st in this event quite handsily representing the Irish Wash Woman, pushing before her on a sleigh her tin, wash board, drying racks, etc., along with a good make. It showed originality and that considerable time and work had been put in which is what is looked for by the judges.

For this event A. Savers donated a night gown.
Polly Bibby took second dressed as Minnie Mouse and is entitled to some repair work to be done at Karmen's shoe repair shop as her prize.
Men's Comic—There were only three in this event which made it very difficult for the judges to come to a decision, nevertheless S. Tory was awarded first representing "The Rubber Nose", his actions while skating giving him the needed margin. He received a quantity of paint donated by the Progress Lumber Co.

1st Prize was awarded second prize in this event and received a pouch donated by Heffernan for representing an old farmer.
Girl Fancy—Molly Patterson dressed as Boy Blue took first in this class and received an album donated by Snyder.

Second in this event was won by Doreen Adams dressed as "Hearts", receiving a necklace donated by Cork.
Boys' Fancy—G. Boyd coming out dressed as Mickey Mouse took first and received a sweater donated by Armstrong.

Second in this event was won by Marshall Patterson, as a clown, the prize being a tie and handkerchiefs, donated by Rudd and Patterson.
Girls' Comic—This class brought out one of the best costumes of the night. "The Old Woman in the Shoe" in the person of Peggy Fraser, for which she received first prize being a powder box donated by Dupre's Garage.

Second prize in this class was won by M. Carrell as a darky the prize being some lingerie donated by A. Savers.
Boys' Comic—Keith Agnew took first as an old man, receiving a bag of flour donated by Mr. Bibby.

Mr. S. J. Hungerford Apptd. President C.N.

WORKS WAY UP LADDER FROM APPRENTICE TO PRESIDENT
IN 48 YEARS

The Honorable Charles P. Fuller, K. C., chairman of the trustees of Canadian National Railways, today issued the following circular: "Mr. S. J. Hungerford has been appointed President of the National Railways, reporting to the Trustees. The appointment covers the Canadian National Railway Company and other railway and other companies comprised in the National Railway. Mr. Hungerford has been Acting President of the Canadian National System since July 20, 1932, carrying on at the same time his former duties as Vice-President in charge of operation."

Few railroad men in Canada have gone more thoroughly "through the mill" than has Mr. Hungerford. His story is one of thoroughness in his job, of learning every phase of railroad work from the days when, in 1886, he trudged along with his dinner pail to the Southwestern Railway shops in Farnham, Que., to start his career as an apprentice, who in due time became President of the largest railroad system in America. It is a story of a boy, earning eight cents an hour for ten hours a day $4.80 a week, who studied at home every night and carried his books to work with him so that he might study still more at lunch hour when the other young fellows around the shops were playing football or baseball. It is a story of learning in every part of railway mechanical work from the days of the old wood-burning locomotives to their modern giant successors.

Men who worked with him in the Southeastern shops at Farnham; at Montreal; at Megantic; at McAdams Junction in the East; or at Cranbrook, Calgary, or Winnipeg; in the West, all tell the same story: that S. J. Hungerford moved up the ladder because he studied his every job thoroughly from the time he first carried his dinner pail into the shops.

Death Saturday claimed the third victim as the result of the tragic fire that swept the farm home of Fred A. Brown, near Viking on January 19th last, when Mabel Brown, 17, died in Viking hospital from burns and exposure incidental to the fire. Ella, 29, and Annie, 17, are previous victims of the same blaze, that started from the explosion of a kerosene lamp.

A meeting of St. Thomas W. A. will be held at the Vicarage on Wednesday (tonight) at 8:00 p.m. All members are asked to make an effort to be back where they belong. New members are cordially asked for, and visitors will be welcome.

Mr. Fred Masterson who has been visiting his relatives in Los Angeles returned last week and says he is glad to be back where he belongs. Completing his apprenticeship, Mr. Hungerford became a machinist, and as such he worked at various points in Quebec, Ontario, and Vermont. His post office address has changed many times. In the course of his railway work, the postman has found him at Farnham, Montreal, Megantic, McAdams, Cranbrook, Calgary, Winnipeg and Toronto and for the past eleven years as Vice-President of the Canadian National System in charge of Operating, Maintenance and Construction and latterly Acting President, his address has again been Montreal.

After working as a machinist, Mr. Hungerford in 1894 became charge-man for the Canadian Pacific Railway at Windsor Street Station, Montreal. Then he moved to Cranbrook, B. C., as Locomotive Foreman. Article No. 2

(Special to The Star)

The proceedings of the House of Commons are always conducted more or less under a close eye on the next election, but the first definite gun in the coming campaign was fired by the leader of the Opposition in the debate on the speech from the throne. The address in reply to His Excellency's message was moved by Mr. Gobeil (Comptons, Que.) and seconded by Mr. Barber (Fraser Valley, B. C.) Mr. Gobeil, speaking in French after a brief introduction in English, eulogized the policies and activities of the government and was ably supported in this by the member for Fraser Valley. Mr. Barber gave figures to show that British Columbia's four principle industries, lumbering, mining and fishing and agriculture are now very definitely on the upgrade and that the government's policy of dumping duties against American surplus products have saved the fruit growers of his district from utter extinction. The member for Fraser Valley declared that the large increase in shipping from the all-year-round ports of Vancouver and New Westminster are due entirely to the Empire agreements, and have reached an increase of thirty-five per cent over the record of 1931-32. His speeches were brief, neither taking their full forty minutes.

Hon. Mackenzie King, upon opening his address, said he could congratulate the mover and seconder of the address upon discharging their duties to the satisfaction of the Prime Minister and their fellow members, but that he should have to disagree with most of their remarks. He considered that the by-elections held during the last year or two more particularly in view of the increased majorities given the Liberal candidates, afford positive evidence that the electors have lost faith in the present administration. He therefore declared that the government's reluctance to hold an election in South Oxford, vacant since May by the death of a Liberal member was an indication that they had lost faith in themselves and were afraid to face the electors again.

The Liberal leader (who has evidently been "training down" since last session) is manifestly in a militant mood and undoubtedly has the backing of the party for an early election. In reference to the speech from the throne, he emphatically denied there was any foundation for the government's claim that returning property was indicated by "exceeding" (read improving) revenues, increasing employment, and a more confident outlook upon the future.

He declared that such a paragraph had become merely routine in all speech from the throne (for which the government is responsible) and meant no more now than it did in 1931-32-33, when events had proved it entirely unfounded. Mr. King quoted figures he had secured from the Department of Trade and Commerce in which he said the increased employment index had been arrived at by the inclusion of men in relief camps, who were being paid out of the public treasury. This proved that the prosperity headlined in the press was not a prosperity borne out by the facts but arrived at by the manipulation of statistics. He also reviewed statistics in regard to expanding trade and improving revenues to show that these statements were equally unreliable.

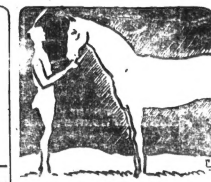

The Liberal leader assailed the policy of wheat restriction, a reversal of the agricultural policy of the country, and declared that unless there was some provision for compensation, as provided in the United States, such a course would be virtual confiscation. If production were to be restricted, thereby reducing cargoes, why proceed with the St. Lawrence waterway, and by what authority had the Prime Minister signed such an agreement without consulting the representatives of the western farmers? Mr. King said that planning for scarcity instead of plenty was "little sort of blasphemy" which brought a tilt between the leaders. When Mr. King proceeded to rephrase the prayer-book thanksgiving for abundance to fit one for scarcity the Prime Minister exclaimed: "That is as near blasphemy as this house has ever heard", whereupon Mr. King advised the Prime Minister "not to get excited but try to be more composed." In regard to a central bank, the Liberal leader asked why the change of "from" to "to" the government was beginning to realize they were behind the times and were now appropriating this and some other (continued on page two)

The Fact Finders

By Ed. Kressy

Origin of Words and Phrases

"THE GREATEST HAPPINESS OF THE GREATEST NUMBER"

This expression sounds as if it might be a modern Communist or Socialist slogan. However, it is neither modern nor is it a political plank or slogan. The source of the thought in this form was with social philosophers, and it emanated from the study not from a party roster.

The first use of these words which we find recorded is in Hutcheson's "Inquiry Concerning Moral Good and Evil" which dates 1729: "That action is best which procures the greatest happiness for the greatest numbers." Under date of 1764 we find the expression used by Beccaria in the introduction to his "Essay on Crimes and Punishments." Another and later suspicious use of the words is by that great English Jurist and philosopher, Jeremy Bentham, who said, in volume ten of his well-known "Works" on social science. "Prestley was the first (unless it was Beccaria) who taught my lips to pronounce the sacred truth—that the greatest happiness of the greatest number is the foundation of morals and legislation."

"ILL NEWS TRAVELS FAST"

"Don't worry, mother. You know if anything had happened to him you'd know it. Ill news travels fast!" How familiar we all are with the use of the old saying that ill news travels fast. And how we shall reaffirm that old platitudes that there is nothing new under the sun when we learn that it is from the first century after Christ that the saying comes to us.

We have it from the authorship of Greek biographers, "Plutarch, whose 'lives' have and will survive the ages. It was in his writings 'Of In-quiritiveness" that Plutarch made the sage remark that "ill news goes quick and far."

"Suiting the action to the word, he hauled off and landed a punch square on the jaw, laying the man out at his feet."

We have that from a boxing story in a current magazine. Quite a contrast in language, the vernacular "hauling off" and the elegant "suiting the action to the word," though the latter is a familiar phrase in modern writing. To say something and then do it, to threaten or describe an action and then carry it out, is to suit the action to the word.

In its origin, however, the expression had a more technical significance, the words being addressed to actors who were being instructed as to their gestures, and told to "suit the action to the word."

We have the phrase from that famous passage in Shakespeare where Hamlet gives advice to the players by whose performance he expects to confound his mother and uncle. He has just told them not to overdo their gestures. Then, "Be not too tame, neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor; suit the action to the word, to the action, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature."

THE ROTARY CLUB

Rotary clubs which dot every little town in Canada, the United States and abroad, had their inception over a quarter of a century ago in Chicago.

In the year 1906 a lawyer, a tailor, a coal dealer, and a mining operator organized a club whose object was civic improvement. They named themselves after the fact that they met at each other's places of business in rotation.

Adopting as their motto the words

"Service above self, he profits most who serves best," they became the nucleus for what is now the International Rotary Association.

NOT WORTH A "RAP"

If we stop to think about it at all, we should probably attribute the origin of the phrase "Not worth a rap," which is a quick knock or light blow. But this phrase has a different story, on which illuminates in the telling an obscure page in the history of coins.

For the "rap" from which this saying is derived was the popular name for the various tokens that passed current for a half-penny in Ireland in the early part of the Eighteenth Century. The word was generally used for any coin of trifling value, and many references to it can be found in English literature. For instance, Swift said:

"Many counterfeits passed about under the name of 'raps'."

When people declare they "do not care a fig" no reference to the fruit is intended. "Fig" is from the Italian word "fico" meaning a snap of the fingers.

Some Soldiers Of Today--

While alluding on bygone days, "F. H." dashes off the following homily in the "Christian Science Monitor":

Three boys in khaki sat rather forlornly upon an embankment as I was walking in front of the memorial chapel in a small college town. These boys, in lands across the sea, it was my job to shepherd, boys in khaki, keep them out of mischief as much as was humanly possible, promote recreations conducted on their own power. When I could do nothing better, I stopped and gossiped. I did them good to talk. So now I stopped and sat down beside these boys.

Yes, they were from a not distant reforestation camp, had the day off—the next day, too—and so had hitch-hiked in, twenty-five miles. Did I know whether the railway station was open all night? And would they be run in if they stayed on the streets after midnight? I suggested a movie, but they did not rise to the suggestion. Thirty dollars a month they were getting, to be sure (twenty-five of it sent home, the remaining five given to them), but they had not yet seen their first pay day. They were broke—dead broke. It was wonderfully like meeting up with three "casuals," in some little French village back of the lines on the western front.

I asked about their homes. I asked how they liked their job. Fine, they said; they were being well fed, "meat three times a day." They described their sleeping quarters, regular barracks I conjectured. Their recreations were as yet meager; they had baseball and boxing gloves. Their work thus far was chiefly road building and, characteristically, they did not know the road's purpose or its destination.

They had never heard the word but they were suffering from ennui and, with thirty-three hours of free time on their hands, they had come in to see the town. They sought nothing from me, apparently expected nothing, were rather surprised that I had stopped to talk with them; but in my mind they had stirred poignant memories. I took their names, gave them some money (not much, enough to get a little food and perhaps a place to sleep); and, taking them across to the library introduced them to one of the librarians, who gave each a magazine.

SEED CLEANING

An effort has been made in many parts of the country to make it comparatively easy for the farmer to get his seed cleaned. The establishment of local and district seed cleaning plants has been encouraged by government institutions, including the Dominion Experimental Farms, and many have been in operation for a number of years. Where local cleaning plants are in operation, it remains only for the grower to haul his seed to the plant where it will be cleaned and graded at comparatively small cost. When a grower is not fortunate enough to be located reasonably close to a cleaning plant and has no other convenient means of getting the work done, it is good business either to purchase a small sized fanning mill himself or arrange to have the use of one in his locality.

In some parts of the country, particularly in Western Canada, travelling cleaning plants take care of considerable seed cleaning. Complete outfits mounted on trucks do custom cleaning in much the same way as custom threshing is done. To any one who can finance the undertaking, the travelling cleaning plant offers an opportunity of turning spare time during the winter into cash particularly in districts where no modern seed cleaning equipment is available.

Seed cleaning is an off season job and should not be put off until spring when time is more valuable on the farm and cleaning plants are usually running at full capacity. If the cleaning is to be done by the local plant it is best, therefore, to haul in the seed during the winter when better satisfaction can be given by the plant operators and the cost of hauling may be lower. If one waits until spring to prepare or set aside enough good grain for seed, he often finds that the best has been fed during the winter with the result that poorer seed may actually be used than would have otherwise been necessary. It is important in this connection to guard against the purchase of new or little known varieties and further, to insist on Government graded seed.

FEEDING THE NURSING SOW

During the suckling period particular care should be taken to keep the sow from becoming constipated, as this condition in the sow will cause heavy losses among the young pigs, and those that live are likely to be stunted and fail to develop properly. Because of its laxative nature, bran is an especially valuable feed at this time.

One of the most effective nursing rations which has been used at the Dominion Experimental Station, Lacombe, is composed of equal parts by weight of oat chop, barley chop and bran, supplemented with a little sweet skim-milk. Sour milk should never be fed to a sow nursing a litter, as it is almost certain to cause trouble in the young pigs. The sow should at all times have access to a mineral mixture. In order to prevent anaemia among the young pigs, a dot about a foot square should be placed in the pen daily.

Plenty of space should be provided as exercise will keep the sow in good condition and guard against the possibility in the little pigs; and unless the pigs get ample exercise they will not grow or develop properly.

SELECTING MALE BIRDS

In selecting cockerels there are, of course, certain breed characteristics and disqualifications which must be considered, but the most important requirement is constitutional vigor, which is especially denoted by alertness of carriage and rich pigmentation of the back and legs. Other points to be looked for are a broad head with round and prominent eyes, short and well curved beak, and well developed comb and wattles; a long deep body with a wide back; and legs set well apart. Colour of plumage and legs, and tail carriage should conform as closely as possible to the breed standard, and the bird should be of standard weight or heavier.

The above remarks are just as applicable where pedigree birds are used. At the Dominion Experimental Station, Lacombe, where White Wyandottes are kept, all the females are trap-nested and all chicks pedigreed. This simplifies the choice of males for breeding. Detailed records are kept and it is possible, by examining the records of his sisters, to determine whether a cockerel is sired by a male that has been able to transmit to his progeny the most desirable qualities of the parent. In this connection, it is possible, by examining the records of his sisters, to determine whether a cockerel is sired by a male that has been able to transmit to his progeny the most desirable qualities of the parent. possible, or always and only as a potential menace. Shall these boys be made to feel that we respect them and the work they are doing for us and our children, or shall they feel that we regard them as little better than strays from a federal reform school?

Few towns have ready-made facilities for doing anything for them; such effort would have to be initiated probably by Women's Clubs, Kiwanis Gyros and the like. To do this will mean inconvenience and sacrifice such as war has always demanded. But the war being waged today by these boys is worthy of our support.

SPONGES SEARCH FOR FOOD

Specimens of Walking Variety Found in London Aquarium

Sponges that can walk about in search of food, instead of being forever anchored to one place have mysteriously appeared in tanks of sea water in the London Aquarium. Mr. Maurice Burton, the sponge expert of the British Museum, says that he has been unable to find any sponge of this kind among those previously captured by scientists. The habit of the sponge animals is to fasten themselves permanently to some spot on the ocean bottom, and never leave it until they die, food being obtained by a continual current of sea-water in and out of tube-like passages which penetrate the sponge's body. Living specimens of the walking sponges, however, were collected and submitted to Mr. Burton, who verified the reports of the museum keepers that the sponges do creep slowly from a foot- less spot to one where the supplies of provender are greater.

PASTURE DEMONSTRATIONS

Dairy cattle grazed on fertilized pasture yield 823 pounds more milk per acre than on unfertilized fields, according to results of standard pasture improvement demonstrations carried out on 26 illustration Stations established by the Dominion Experimental Farms. As typical examples of these methods of increasing the value of pasture, two adjoining fields of three acres each on representative pasture land were selected and fenced separately. One field was unfertilized, and the other received early in spring 100 pounds of nitrate of soda, 350 pounds of superphosphate, and 100 pounds of potash per acre. In June 50 pounds of nitrate of soda were added. On these fields the cattle were grazed alternately.

THE BOOK

the first line of which reads, "The Holy Bible," and which contains Four Great Treasures

by BRUCE & BARTON

"The Holy Bible"

A GREAT DECLARATION

There are some wonderful things in the book of Leviticus for the student of history. For example, many of the laws of health and sanitation on which we moderns pride ourselves are distinctly set forth here. We think of the disinfection of a house where there has been contagious disease as a comparatively recent development in medical science, but Moses prescribed that the blanket of the sick man should be burned and the house thoroughly purified. The book of Numbers, also, has some high lights, but speaking generally these two books are less interesting than Genesis, Exodus and Deuteronomy, the other three, and may well be omitted if one is reading to get the best in the easiest way.

Start in then with the first chapter of Genesis and you are gripped at once. Here is no preface, no argument, only a great declaration. In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light.

Viewed only as a piece of good writing that paragraph is superb. What a way to begin a story! How dignified, how impressive. How swift and sure the movement! How noble superior to the Greek mythologies, and free from their grossness and puerility!

There is an old anecdote, attributed usually to Charles A. Dana, about a reporter who protested that a certain news story could not be compressed into a column. Dana sent him to the Bible. "Read the first chapter of Genesis and you'll find the whole story of the creation in less than six hundred words. The whole story is there in one chapter, majestic in its simplicity, every line fraught with meaning and interest.

If you argue that Evolution tells the story very differently, your argument is only partly true. What does Evolution say? That in the beginning there was nothing but nebulous matter; that it gathered itself first into hot shapeless planets, which by revolving grew round; then into land and water; that gradually vegetation appeared, then life in low forms, then higher forms, and finally man. Look back at Genesis and you are surprised perhaps to discover a certain method of progress in its account which is not at all at variance with the best scientific knowledge.

It, too, starts with matter fluid and formless, "without form, and void." But the matter is not wholly inert; the creative Spirit (the scientists say the "First Cause," which means nothing more except that they don't know) is brooding over the vast shapeless egg and incubating something of purpose. The matter is in motion. It separates itself into masses. There is distinction between that which belongs to the earth and that which is of the other bodies. Upon the earth the waters gather in oceans, and land is seen in continents.

$ HOPE VALLEY $

(crowded out last week)

The Burns' concert and dance, which was held in the school, January 25th, drew a record crowd. The night and roads were ideal, hence a packed school house. We were surprised though not to see any kilt wearers; not even "Scotty".

The programme consisted of dancing, singing and a reading. It lasted until the wee sma' hours of the morning.

The weather man apparently believed the adage: "A change is as good as a rest;" what a rest we should be enjoying.

"There has been a distinct improvement in the movement of general commodities, although grain is down, but on the whole there are most encouraging signs everywhere," said C. E. Stockill, Winnipeg, assistant to the Vice-President, Canadian Pacific Western Lines, interviewed at Victoria recently.

Playing to capacity audiences, the Chauvin Jongleurs, modelled on the Chauvin Courts entertainment and with several Chauve Souris stars, were an outstanding success in their week's show at the Chateau Frontenac, Quebec between Christmas Eve and New Year's Day.

Mrs. Gordon peered anxiously out of the window.

"Papa," she said nervously, "I do wish you'd put on your shoes. There you are in your stocking-feet and I believe Nancy's going to bring young Roemer in!"

Mr. Gordon glanced up from his newspaper.

His wife turned slowly from the window, a slight flush on her smooth round face, a face that had a skin almost as fine as a baby's with only tiny wrinkles about the mouth and eyes—like a withered rose leaf.

"Papa, I think Nancy—" There was a pause.

She did not finish, for the door opened and Nancy came in. She closed it behind her and stood looking at them, laughter in her eyes.

"You dear old things," she said gayly, "I thought you'd gone to bed; I know I'm late!"

"We sat up for you dear, but I was afraid you'd bring Roemer in. Nancy and Papa here in your stocking-feet."

Nancy laughed. "Papa wouldn't mind," she said, taking off her hat and tossing it upon a chair. She had glorious hair; the tints of auburn in it glinted like sunshine caught and held in wavy brown shadows. She swept a rumpled lock in place now with a deft little touch, absent-mindedly unconscious of the grace of it.

"It was lovely—the music, I mean, and we walked home; that's why we're so late, and—oh, Papa, I met old Major Lomax there; he stopped me to ask, quite pointedly, about Roddy. He said: 'Tell me, child, is he doing well?'"

"Of course you said he was!" her mother exclaimed. "Why, I thought the major knew that Roddy was in the Greenough Trust Company in New York," she added proudly.

Nancy, who was looking at her father, nodded thoughtfully.

"He knew all that, of course, but he was very pointed. I didn't know just what he meant."

"He's getting odd," remarked Mr. Gordon grudgingly. "Lomax must be close on eighty—that's all. He gets close to Roddy when he's grown up. I thought he was getting dirty, but he let Haddon buy that racer—Polestar Third—out of his stables. Did he keep you?" he added grimly.

"It's eleven o'clock. I'll wager the squawking was over at ten-thirty; you and that Roemer boy must have found the walking good."

His daughter laughed. "It's a lovely night," she said archly.

Her father laid down his newspaper across his knee.

"What if you see in that fellow, Nancy Virginia?" he asked impatiently.

She gave him a sidelong look, her dark lashes shading her blue eyes softly, without casting darkness into them.

"What do I see in Page?" she smiled provokingly, showing a fugitive glimpse in one cheek. "I'm sure I don't know Papa. Do you think people do usually?" Do you suppose old Major Lomax knows what he saw in that poor Diana Aylett? He's married her for forty years, hasn't he? Or do you, at ten-thirty, what you saw first in Mama, Papa?"

"I suppose the major and I fell in love, Nancy," Mr. Gordon retorted. Do I understand that you're in love with Page?" he added dryly.

Nancy moved easily across the room and looked out of the window, her small slight figure and the uplift of her defiant little head showing plainly against the square of darkness.

"That's just what I'd like to know, Papa," she replied, and laughed a little tremulously.

Mrs. Gordon stirred uneasily. "Papa, it's time to go to bed," she warned him, trying to catch his eye.

But he ignored her, reaching for a pair of old heeled leather slippers and thrusting his feet into them.

"If you're so keen about falling in love, Nancy," he remarked calmly, "it's a pity you couldn't have managed it with Richard Morgan."

Nancy flashed around upon him, her blue eyes wide open.

"I hate that man!" she said quickly.

"Hoity-hoity!" said her father, rising. "You'd better go to bed; it's time you got a little sense and—"

But Nancy interrupted him with a little startled, joyous cry, her eyes fixed on the space outside the open window. Then she ran temptuously to the front door.

Mrs. Gordon looked blank. "It can't be that Roemer boy back again!" she exclaimed.

Mr. Gordon, whose ears were sharper than hers, pushed back his chair, looking toward the door.

"Roddy?" Mrs. Gordon sprang to her feet, flushed and eager. "It can't be—why, Roddy darling!"

For Nancy appeared, driving her brother before her. The reading lamp on the center table made a soft illumination which showed young Gordon tall and slender and boyish, but otherwise very like his sister.

"You got off unexpectedly, didn't you, Rod?" Mrs. Gordon asked. "Got a vacation?"

Mrs. Gordon, still clinging to Roddy's arm, was absorbing him so closely that he did not answer, and his father spoke again—sharply.

"It was lovely—the music, I mean, and we walked home that's why we're so late."

"Did you hear me, Rod? How much of a vacation have you got?" His son laughed suddenly, and foolishly, a deep blush mounting to his hair.

"That's what I'd like to know," he exclaimed. "I hope it won't be cut too short."

"I hope not!" his mother agreed warmly. "You've been working too hard, you know it. Now you've got to let me have my own boy for a while. Have you had your supper on the train yet?" she added anxiously.

"Let me get you something—a slice of cold ham—" she started toward the door.

But her son stopped her. "No," he cried harshly. "Don't! For God's sake—I can't eat! Ham?" he laughed shrilly. "Ham? when a man's done for!"

He made an angry, swaying movement toward a chair, stopped short and rallied himself, folding his arms on his breast in a boyishly tragic attitude. His hair was disheveled, too, one long lock hung between his blood-shot eyes. His startled family gradually taking in these details, discovered too, that his necktie was untied and his collar wilted.

Mr. Gordon suddenly sat bolt upright in his chair.

"What's the matter with you boy?" he demanded sharply. "Have you been drinking?"

The young fellow studied himself, turning to his lips, his haggard eyes, looking slowly from one to another in the little group.

"No," he said thickly. "I'm not drunk. I'm a thief."

No one spoke; his mother dropped into the nearest chair and his father stared at him with his mouth open. His son drew a little nearer, searching his face, her eyes intent and wide. She caught at his sleeve.

He shook her hand off. "You'd better not touch me, Nancy. I'm a thief—that's what I came home to tell you all."

The repetition was too much, it forced belief. Mr. Gordon pushed himself forward in his chair, gripping the arms with such force that his knuckles whitened.

"What if you mean?" he demanded hoarsely. "What are you talking about anyhow? Explain yourself!"

Roddy turned a startled look toward him, which had in it something of his boyish flinching from the paternal wrath, but he faced them all desperately.

"I've been taking money—bonds and cash," he repeated it like a lesson he had already learned by rote. "I've been a messenger and probationer in the Trust Company. Mr. Greenough sent me over to the bank's sometimes himself. I've carried a lot of money millions I've stolen. I don't mean to keep any of it. I meant to return it all, but he stopped rapped, and went on harshly. 'I can't, that's all. When you can't you're a thief.'"

His mother staring at him with terrified, incredulous eyes, uttered a cry of anguish.

"You meant to return it?" his father shouted with sudden violence. "You meant to return money you'd stolen? My God, do mean to stand up there—my only son—and admit you're a thief?"

Roddy choked, his smooth young face darkening with shame.

"I meant to return it!" he struggled with himself, facing his father; "I tried to—I even gambled in stocks to make good, but I can't—it's too late—they'll find it out before I can put it back."

"Can't we pay it back?" Nancy's shaking voice startled them; she was looking round at her speechlessly.

"Can't we pay up? How much is it Roddy?" she asked tremulously, her blue eyes fixed on her brother.

He gulped painfully. "Fifteen thousand dollars."

"Roddy!" his mother dropped weakly into her chair.

Mr. Gordon rose and prowled up and down the room, his heeled slippers slapping the floor at every step.

"Fifteen thousand dollars," he repeated fiercely. "By gum, you're more spender for a boy of twenty-three! You're the first felon in our family. How did you get rid of a small fortune? Spend it on chewing gum?"

Young Gordon made no reply; he was breathing hard and drops of cold perspiration stood out on his forehead in beads. Mrs. Gordon was sobbing audibly, her head in her hands, and Nancy stood, looking on. She felt as if her world had suddenly tumbled down about her ears; for the first time in her life, too, her father terrified her.

He wheeled round and came back, thrusting his face close to his son's.

"What do you mean by it? Did you forget the family honor—your own good name? Who taught you to steal? My God in heaven, I never thought my boy'd be a felon!" he raved.

His son faced him sullenly, he felt like a man with his to the wall, but the sting of his father's insults was turning shame into rage; he returned his look with rising fury.

"I didn't take it for myself," he cried bitterly. "I borrowed it—bit by bit to help someone else, someone in distress. I swear I meant to return it; she—he promised to return it to me—things went wrong. I can't put it back in time—I started for Brazil—I—I came here because—I wanted to see Mother first!"

"She?" Mr. Gordon pounced on the pronoun. You've been giving money to a woman—that's what you've been doing! Some painted hussy's been playing you for money!"

"She's not a painted hussy!" cried his son passionately. "She's the loveliest woman in the world—I love her, I'd steal for her, I'd die for her. I'm going to jail for her now!"

"Going to jail for her now, are you?" his father shouted. "A pretty story—stealing for a jade, a hussy."

"Oh, Papa, hush!" shrieked Mrs. Gordon, snatching at his sleeve. "Hush!" She was in tears.

But her husband shook her off. "You keep out of it!" he said fiercely. "You let me alone—I know what I'm talking about. Here's this young jackass been stealing for a hussy! D'you hear me, sir? He thundered, facing his son again. "You've forgotten the family honor, you've broken your mother's heart, you've disgraced your father and your sister—your young sister! Look at her, a girl in the morning of life with a thief for a brother!"

"I'm sorry, Father," Roddy burst out hoarsely. "But it's not true—about her, the lady, I mean, who—"

"Lady?" mocked his father, "lady? By gum! You fool, you mad young fool, you've ruined us all! I'm too poor to bail you out, you'll go to jail—you're a felon, a disgrace to your people, your name, your family honor, yourself and you've done it all for some worthless, painted trollop, d'you hear me, sir? For a painted trollop!"

His son stared at him for a moment, speechless. He was not quite sure that the red-headed, screaming, frantic man was his father. He could not be! And the result plunged deep into the boy's raw heart. Hatred leaped up in him like a flame. He erupted a snarl of rage, like a young wolf gone mad.

"Stop that!" he shouted. "I won't have it! You shan't insult her!"

He rushed blindly at his father, deaf to his mother's shriek. His hands were actually on the older man's throat before he knew it. Then, for the first time, he heard his mother's frantic cries.

WAINWRIGHT DISTRICT SCHOOL TRUSTEES ASSOCIATION

Editor, The Star.

It is a matter of great regret that the School Trustees of the Wainwright District have no trustees Association to handle the educational problems of this district. Never before in the history of our province has there been greater for a closer co-operation of thoughts and actions than at present.

Fellow trustees, don't you think the present time opportune to call a meeting with a view of starting a School Trustees Association, and so place the School Trustees in a position where we can combat upon an equal footing, our opponent organization—"The Alberta Teachers' Alliance."

I shall be very pleased to hear from other School Trustees upon the above subject.

Yours respectfully,
GEO. A. BOND,

TWO BIG DIAMONDS FOUND

PRETORIA—Two remarkable alluvial diamonds, were discovered at Elandfontein, 20 miles north of here January 16. They are respectively 600 and 726 carats. The smaller gem is a good stone while the large one is perfect and flawless. It is believed that the find is part of the famous Cullinan diamond, the largest known, having been discovered about three miles from the spot where the Cullinan was found.

Our Teeth And Our Diet

By Betty Barclay

Our teeth have caused a great deal of comment for their size. Most of us have wondered many times why the colored race seem to have whiter and better teeth than their fair-skinned brothers. We have wondered why some children from foreign lands seem to have perfect teeth while our children who have used a tooth brush all their lives have teeth full of cavities. We have read of one or two spots in the world where tooth trouble seems practically controlled—at least until the outside world arrived and the diet was changed.

Clearly there must be some connection between our teeth and the foods we eat. Convinced that diet is an important factor in improving tooth and gum conditions, scientists determined to ascertain the actual facts by an experiment so carefully conducted and so large in scale that the results would be completely conclusive.

At Mooseheart, Illinois, they found the ideal testing ground. Here in a great estate of 1153 acres, 1200 children lead a full and happy life of education and play. They receive medical and dental care. Their diet is as good as that of the average American child, and equally important to the purpose of the experiment, it could be controlled and recorded.

Under the authority of the University of Chicago, the research program began in October, 1929.

A group of 438 children, ranging in age from 10 to 17, was selected for the test. For the first year these children received the regular Mooseheart fare, supplemented every day with two eight-ounce glasses of orange juice with the juice of half a lemon in each.

The remaining 99 children continued to receive the standard Mooseheart diet without the citrus juices. The fact that this group of children did not share the improvements noted in the other group proved that the benefits came from the orange and lemon juice and from no other cause.

Results were recorded beyond the possibility of human error by natural color photographs and X-ray films. While the 99 "non-citrus" children showed no improvement, startling changes were noted in the citrus-fed group.

During the first year 71 per cent of the children had gum troubles (gingivitis) while at the end of the second year only 10 per cent were so afflicted. An 86 per cent perfect record! Of the ten per cent of cases which did not clear up all were complicated by the presence of deposits (calculus) on the teeth.

During the first year 79 per cent of the children developed one or more new cavities, while during the second year only 34 per cent showed new trouble of this type. A 57 per cent improvement!

From their records, which now have proved to have historic significance, the investigators conclude:

That gingivitis (soft, spongy, puffed or bleeding gums) is caused by lack of some diet factor which fresh orange and lemon juice supply.

That tooth decay has more than one cause, some of them possibly not associated with diet, but that one of the causes is clearly a lack of something contained in orange and lemon juice.

Important as these new discoveries are, they do not mean that orange and lemon juices are a substitute for either your dentist or your toothbrush. Gum troubles cannot be successfully combated when teeth are coated with deposits. Even the largest amount of citrus fruits cannot prevent all forms of tooth decay and cannot fill a cavity already formed.

But they do mean that you can add greatly to your chances of maintaining your teeth and gums in healthy, normal condition by having three dental rules instead of two.

1. Brush your teeth twice each day.

2. Go to your dentist at least twice a year.

3. Watch your diet. Have orange or orange juice (or the equivalent in lemon juice) with at least one meal every day. Increase the quantity if your dentist notes a tendency toward gum troubles or excessive decay. In stubborn cases the amount has been raised to a full quart a day of orange-lemon juice.

For many years rye has occupied an important place in Western Canada as a preventive or check against soil drifting. It is also used to good advantage in the control of wild oats as it matures earlier than does barley, the latter crop usually being regarded as particularly useful in the eradication of the above pest.

BETTY BARCLAY HELPS THE COOK

Any visitor to the Chicago Fair who saw the crowds, youngsters and oldsters, lined up for hot cakes and syrup, certainly must have realized the truth of the saying "Going like hot cakes!"

It's an old American custom, no matter what we call them—hot cakes, pan cakes, griddle cakes—but served hot with plenty of butter and syrup full of mellow maple flavor, they are popular with young and old alike. So are waffles, which are first cousins to hot cakes.

Serve them for Sunday morning, for Sunday evening or for a children's pancake supper party. All the good things in the pancake with the quick energy value of the syrup are just what we need to keep out the chill of winter.

There are many kinds of hot cakes and waffles and they are all good. Serve the kind your family likes best but whichever kind you elect to have see to it that there is a bountiful supply of butter and a can of syrup to go with them. For the flavor of maple and hot cakes go together like ham and eggs.

Rice Griddle Cakes
1 cup sifted flour
1 1/2 teaspoons combination baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon sugar
One-third cup cooked rice
1 egg, well beaten
1 cup milk
2 tablespoons melted butter
Sift flour, salt, sugar, and sift again. Add rice. Combine egg and milk; add gradually to flour mixture beating only enough to blend. Add shortening. Baked on hot, greased griddle. Serve hot with maple-syrup. Makes 12 to 15 griddle cakes.

Bread Griddle Cakes

1 1/2 teaspoons combination baking powder

HEALTH

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

MEDICAL DETECTIVES

The detection of the criminal in the minds of the public, the chief service of a police department. We disagree with this view if we believe that it is more important to prevent crimes than to detect the criminal. Nevertheless, we will all agree that if a crime has been committed, the guilty person should be found, not so much that the offender may be punished but to prevent further crimes. The first duty of medicine is to prevent disease. In spite of all our efforts, disease does occur. There are diseases which arise within the body of the patient, and there are others which are the result of the invasion of the body by disease germs. These germs come from some other person, and so we can say that, as a general rule, every case of disease that is due to germs comes from another case. Here it is that the medical detectives on the staffs of our health departments enter the picture. They are known as epidemiologists. When a case of communicable disease is reported to the health department, the epidemiologist tries to find the answer to two questions: "From whom did he get the disease?" and "To whom has he given it?"

It is important for us all that these questions be answered so that the spread of disease may be checked through bringing under control the original source of the germs, as well as those to whom the germs may have been spread and who, in turn, might pass them to others. We do not expect our most capable crime detectives to solve crimes that are unknown to them. If our house is robbed, we report the crime to the police. In the same way, it is necessary for us to report communicable diseases to the health department if we are to have action in the detection of the responsible source of the disease.

There are communicable diseases against which we can protect ourselves, such as smallpox and diphtheria, but for protection against most of the communicable diseases we must rely upon group action, through health departments, in detecting and controlling the sources of infection.

The medical detectives are not heard about very often. They go about their work day by day, not always successfully, seeking for the sources of disease. Individually, we can help them by reporting disease promptly; in return we receive protection from disease.

Lake Winnipeg is 710 feet above sea-level; Lake Superior, 602; Lake Huron, 581; Lake Erie, 572; and Lake Ontario 246 feet above sea-level.

Since Great Bear Lake is only 391 feet above sea-level and its greatest depth is 75 fathoms (450 feet), the bottom of the lake at that point must be below sea-level.

"Sculls or Skulls", whichever way they are spelt suits Georg Von Opel, who captured the Diamond Sculls at Henley, England, and who was a winner at Toronto, Canada, for he has just returned from a month of hunting south of Banff, world famous Canadian Pacific Rocky Mountain Resort, and has brought back with him some splendid specimens of big game skulls. After looking for a two weeks' trip, he found the sport so good that he increased it to six weeks. Elk, moose, mule-deer, Rocky Mountain Goats, and Bighorn Sheep, he added to his collection while hunting south, but failed to get a grizzly. For two days he trailed one big fellow but the helmet and didd changeable weather met with made success impossible. The grizzly, however, appearing by the trail, turned the tables on sports by trailing the hunter to camp and stealing deer's meat, grizzly goat head, a Van Axel puma, the trip with Frank Phillips, famous Rocky Mountain guide, a picture shows Von Opel on the right. ## SUCCESS with POULTRY

by FULLER D. BAIRD
COLD WEATHER NOTES

Look out for frozen drinking water. About two-thirds of every egg consists of water, so hens must drink relatively large amounts in order to keep up egg production. If there are no facilities for keeping the water warm in the poultry houses, hot water should be supplied as often as necessary during the day in order to prevent freezing.

It is especially desirable to have water with the chill removed available first thing in the morning, as most hens like to drink as soon as they are aroused. Don't force hens wakened early by electric lights to wait until later for a supply of drinking water.

Green feeds such as lettuce, kale, onions, and spinach, should be fed all winter long, if possible. Green clover or alfalfa hay is good, if fresh greens fail, so also are cabbage and root crops. But do not feed raw potatoes or frozen feeds.

Provide sufficient ventilation at all times to prevent moisture from gathering on the litter and walls, but avoid drafts in cold weather. Provide cloth curtains for certain openings into the house so that the birds can be protected during heavy storms or zero weather without cutting off the supply of pure air.

The litter on the floor should be kept dry and clean.

In cold climates, the back and side walls of the poultry house should be covered on the outside with two-ply roofing paper.

It has been shown that increased egg production can be secured by keeping the temperature inside the laying house above freezing at all times by an artificial heating system. Artificial heat, however, involves considerable expense and apparently, the financial advantage is not sufficiently great to warrant its general adoption. It is more important to avoid sudden temperature changes, drafts, dampness, and bad ventilation.

Do not allow eggs to freeze. A frozen egg is a low quality egg because its white breaks down and the shell may be cracked. In cold weather, collect eggs both noon and night.

Canada is the only country in the world where egg laying contests have been so standardized that they can be held on a national basis; and Canada is also the only country where pedigree registration on a production basis with government recognition has been established.

If Canadian butter of consistent quality could be supplied to the Liverpool (Eng.) market, says the Canadian trade Commissioner, there is reason to believe that in time it would command a price equal to that of the best New Zealand or Australian product.

TURKISH COFFEE

EVER try coffee as they make it in Turkey? You've missed a treat if you haven't.

Use pulverized coffee—freshly ground. While the water is boiling—add a demitasse full for each person—measure a heaping teaspoon of coffee per cup and mix it with an equal measure of granulated sugar. When the water boils hard, add the coffee, and when it looks frothy remove it from the heat. After a moment or two, let it boil up again and repeat this until a third time.

Then pour it thick and foamy into the cups and serve it at once. Add a sprinkle which may be unsweetened large will be precipitated. Turkish coffee should not be served in cups larger than the demitasse; it is always served without cream.

Parsnip Souffle

Cook four medium-sized parsnips in boiling water. When tender, remove the skins and rub through a colander. Mix together one teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper, one teaspoon sugar. Add the seasonings and one tablespoon butter to the parsnips. Melt two tablespoons of butter in a saucepan, stirring in two tablespoons of flour and one cup of milk. Be sure the mixture is thick and smooth. Add to the parsnips, together with the yolk of two well-beaten eggs. Beat the whites of the eggs until stiff and fold into the mixture. Put in a buttered baking dish and bake for 25 minutes in a moderate oven. Serve immediately, or the souffle will fall.
